

The makers of the Constitution certainly did not intend for unsolicited interruptions within a private residence under the pretext of free commerce or a "business relationship". Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protects the wishes of people who choose to be left alone. If one wants to receive phone calls they do business with, they can always choose not to participate in the "do-not call list" that is a part of Indiana's Telephone Privacy law.